Parliamentary Elections.

THE FRIENDS and supporters of Mr. J. R. STREET will be at the Royal Hotel, corner King and York streets, SYDNEY, at 11 a.m., to witness his entry to the Hastings.

TO THE ELECTORS OF EAST SYDNEY.

Gentlemen.—In response to the request of many influential gentlemen, I have the honour to announce myself a candidate for your suffrage, and being a native of the colony, and for the greater part of my life a resident in this electorate, trust I am qualified to represent you. I have no personal or pecuniary interest upon your support and assistance in returning me to Parliament as one of your members.

Should it be desired that he present a more political and franker statement, here may the progress of this colony as compared with that of others favouring protective measures has depended upon the simplicity of our tariff and the absence from it of any protective policy.

So far as the policy of the present Government is to be gathered from the published address of the Premier, Mr. Henry Parkes, it appears that the policy of the Government regarding the taxes proposed to be submitted to Parliament will tend to the more healthy financial condition of the colony, and the maintenance of the public service. On the other hand, many years passed New South Wales to be the administration of all her neighbours.

All questions before Parliament shall if you do me the honour of placing me there, receive my most careful attention, and my aim will ever be the advancement and progress of the colony, good government, and happiness and prosperity of the people.

On the subject of the day, I have no personal or pecuniary opportunities of addressing you on several occasions, as well as on the hustings on Thursday.

I have the honour to be,

Yours very obedient servant,

JOHN R. STREET, JOHN R. STREET.

Sydney, 1st February, 1887.

It was no time for trying experiments with our resources, and the ad valorem duties should consequently be allowed to stand.

Mr. W. S. Foley supported the motion.

The Chairman then put the motion to the meeting, and it was carried unanimously, amid loud cheers.

The meeting terminated with the usual complimentary resolutions.

Subsequently Mr. J. D. Young held another large and influential meeting at Carey's American Hotel, Athol-place, Alderman Buckle in the chair. Mr. Young was well received. Alderman John C. Morris proposed, Alderman M. Coulton seconded, and Mr. Consens supported the usual vote of confidence, which was unanimously carried.

MR. PRITCHARD'S MEETING

Last evening Mr. W. Pritchard, one of the candidates for the representation of West Sydney, addressed an assemblage of about 1,000 persons from the balcony of the Black Dog Hotel, Pitt-street-street.

Mr. W. J. McGillivray was voted to the chair, and, in introducing the candidate to his hearers, remarked that Mr. Pritchard was a thorough-going free-trader, an honest man, and one who would not betray the confidence reposed in him by the electors.

Mr. Pritchard, who met with a very favourable reception, said that one of the claims he proposed upon the electors was that many years ago he had, as a young man, fought the battle of freedom for the people of the colony. (Applause.) The burning question to be decided at the ensuing election was that of free trade v. protection, and he would submit to them that it was left to them to decide, and that every candidate should be compelled to speak out for either one or the other. (Hear, hear.) He had to announce himself a free-trader. (Applause.) He had not espoused the great cause simply for the purpose of obtaining votes, but because he had a firm conviction that a free-trade policy was the best guarantee to the happiness and prosperity of the people in every walk of life. (Applause.)

The principal agitators for the establishment of a protective tariff were those who would be directly benefited by it, and whose motives were therefore utterly selfish. He could not believe that there were many in the important industries of West Sydney who were conscientious believers in the principles of free trade, and the policy of the kind would result in the good of the country. (Applause.) In stroking about a great city a stranger, if he sees plenty of ships loading and unloading merchandise at the wharves, naturally and rightly infers that there is plenty of business done in that port. When he sees ships at sea but little shipping, he concludes and with very good reason, that the people are in an impoverished state. It was thus that the contrary effects of free trade and protection were manifested. If a protective policy was adopted, instead of seeing our lines with noble armadas from abroad, we should see a mere handful of goods.

He was anxious to point out that the necessities of the people in every walk of life were the chief cause of prosperity, and that the chief cause of prosperity was the welfare of the people. (Applause.)

He had many reasons for his opinion, and the first was that what he meant or aimed at, this being shown by the constant manner in which many men were trying to get into the service. What the Government did not do was to give them a better position. (Applause.)

He had raised the standard of pure economy and good government, and they had raised the standard of commercial freedom in this young country. They would stand by their colours, and he was quite sure no one would stand by the colours and standards than the gentleman who was seeking their suffrage. (Applause.)

There was no dispute about it—no temporising, no concealing anything, no attempt at sneaking anything in. Everything was above board, and everything they contended for they contended for in the fair light of day. (Hear, hear.) In conclusion, like a true Scotchman, he said, "I am a free-trader, and, as far as my influence goes, I will make the world a better place." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Pritchard was loud and clear, and said that if he could rise in reply to the speech of his opponent he would not sing them now, but he would read them.

"Gather ye nations, brother."

"From forge, and mire, and mill,

"Come science and invention,

"Come art, and commerce,

"Come with your brass and iron,

"Your silver and your gold,

"And your arts that change the face of earth.

"Unknown to me of old."

(Loud cheers.)

Mr. GOODLAD proposed, and Mr. G. KELLIOTT seconded a motion that Mr. Abigail was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate in Parliament.

Mr. IRVING supported the resolution, claiming at the same time to be the first person who brought Mr. Abigail to the notice of the constituents.

Mr. LEWIS had had that day returned Sir Henry Parkes unopposed, and he hoped this and other constituents return him and his friends.

Mr. McELROY also addressed the meeting in support of Mr. Abigail's candidature. He explained the reasons that induced him to support his candidate. East Sydney had been represented by Mr. St. George, and Mr. McElroy's attack on Mr. Abigail, whose support of the Jennings Government he attributed to a fear of the introduction of a tax on colonial cedar. He suggested, amidst great laughter, that the best thing that could be done with Mr. Tooley was to let him cork up in a bottle of his own cedar cases of cedar, a hundred yards long, in any of the British communities. They were told that he described some of the incidents of his journey through America two years and a half ago. There the rich men got richer; but amongst the poor there was more poverty and destitution than there was in Great Britain. The American rich monopolised work, while the little Briton got the working-class, but everyone connected with it. (Cheers and groans.) They were told that the grand old place they loved to call England was going to the dogs, that there was no place worse than England—(murmurs)—but he said that there was no place worse than England. (Applause.)

He was sure that they would be like New South Wales, if they could not find a market for their produce.

Mr. McELROY had spoken, and the audience returned to the affair of the Southern Hemisphere. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. BYRNE supported the resolution, claiming at the same time to be the first person who brought Mr. Abigail to the notice of the constituents.

are not to be driven out of the field without a struggle. They, too, have their representative in Australia, and he presents their case as favourably as possible. It is said that the opposition does not proceed from more than a few Australian merchants, but has been promoted by a small number of British shipowners or agents, who by the arrangements of the Ring have been precluded from a share of the trade. The contention is that the great bulk of the Australian shippers are satisfied with the freight, with the accommodation, and with the general conduct of the shipping trade. The King alleges that they are able to make the rates more reasonable, because by combination they can load the ships more economically than they could be loaded by half-a-dozen or a dozen competing firms. Having the whole of the trade, they know exactly how many vessels are wanted; they can put their hand on such vessels, and will not employ more than are required. There is no loss arising from ships being put on the berth which are not needed, as was formerly the case. It is said that this economy in working alone gives a large profit to the King. Undoubtedly a strong point is here scored by the Association. It is one of the obvious facts of the spot that combination in every department of industry and manufacture gives the maximum of results for the minimum of labour. We have only to imagine the whole of the shipkeeping business of Australia carried on under the control of a perfect organisation, to suggest the vast saving of time and labour, in comparison with the existing system, where there are losses and failures—where the prices are unduly raised to the general public by reason of the excess of competition. Events clearly point to this greater combination in the future. The Shipbrokers' Association, which manages and controls the Anglo-Australian trade works the whole business more economically than it would be managed by a dozen shipbroking firms. And it is interest, doubtless, to give more regular despatch than would be possible by independent shipowners. Half-a-dozen vessels lying in London or Liverpool, all of them having some cargo, but none of them able quickly to load, would necessarily be as inconvenient to Australian shippers as to British shipowners, and there would be mutual loss. As a matter of fact, this was the condition of things out of which the Ring arose. And it cannot be denied that this combination in the shipping trade, looked at from the broadest point of view, secures the service at the least sacrifice of labour and money.

But then arises the objection—the Ring is a monopoly. It is so powerful that hitherto no one could enter the trade and live. Some have tried, and been absorbed. Messrs. Tynan and Co. are struggling, but it is said have so far lost money. Whilst there is opposition, the rates are put down to ruinous prices. Anyone who patronises the opposition vessels, when he has to come to employ those of the Ring, is handicapped with a heavier freight than those who employ the Ring exclusively. As, so far, regular shippers could not trust to get all the accommodation they require from any opposition firm, they are afraid to go to them at all. They cannot afford to be handicapped in the Australian market. The Ring, therefore, is practically a monopoly. Its ordinary customers, who are charged the ordinary rates, cannot leave them without six months' notice. If they do, they will have to pay the higher rates of non-contracting customers. The Ring claims that these are ordinary business arrangements; that they have a right to give preferences to their friends. There is some force in an argument of that kind. If the arrangement is satisfactory to the shippers no one need object. Nor can objection be raised from a public point of view if the British ship owning monopoly does not overcharge the Australian merchants and public, for it is the public who pay in the end. It may be fairly assumed that a monopoly will work the trade more economically and more regularly than it would be worked by excessive competition, for it is within its ability and it is to its interest to do so. But if uncontrolled it is able, and it is to its advantage, to get higher freights than it ought to get. This is the position of the Australian shipping ring. What its profits are we do not know. If they are not greater than those of the P. and O. Company or the Orient Company, with which the Ring has some connection, the merchants of Australia have no reason to be dissatisfied. But the shipping companies never disclose their profits. The formation of the Australian Mutual Shipping Association is calculated to afford the check required. If the Australian merchants think they are overcharged, by joining the association in sufficient numbers they can doubtless load an adequate number of ships to ensure the regular carriage of their goods free from any risk of having to go to the Ring, where they will have the objectionable handicap of non-contracting customers. Where they become shareholders, they will have the profits of the business. The trade is large enough to maintain a second combination without any material risk of loss from that excessive competition which does harm. This company will soonest test the question as to whether there is any excessive profit in the Anglo-Australian shipping business. If there is, the merchants of Australia, who find the trade, are entitled to a share of it, and the effect of an alternative service will probably be to give a sense of relief. To be effective, of course, the association will have to be strong enough to give all its customers the necessary cargo space at regular intervals, at rates as cheap as the most favoured rates of the Ring. If it is formed with this measure of strength, it will be a public benefit, and it will hardly be to the advantage of the Ring to oppose it. They are interested in preserving the good-will of the Australian merchants.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The English mails for Orient Lines, Potosi, dated London, 31st December, 1886, reached Adelaide yesterday, and will be due here to-morrow by the overland express train, in time for delivery at about 2 p.m. His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by the Hon. Rupert Carrington and Mr. E. W. Wallington, private secretary, left by special train yesterday morning for the Illawarra district. Lord Carrington is to travel via Waterfall, and to be conveyed by coach to Clifton and by train to Wollongong. It will be seen by our special reporter's report of the Wollongong show that the Governor and suite arrived safe. A public demonstration in honour of the visit of his Excellency is to be carried out to-day. The proceedings are to include the opening of the Town Hall, and the inauguration of the Wollongong show, and in the evening Lord Carrington will be entertained at a banquet. The Governor will proceed to Sutton Forest on Friday, and will in all probability remain there until next Tuesday morning.

At a meeting of the Executive Council, held yesterday morning, it was decided to call the Hon. Edmund Barton and Mr. Robert Wisdom, Q.C., to assist in the Legislative Council.

Yesterday a supplement to the Government Gazette was issued proclaiming the following holidays:—Friday, February 25, in the police district of Macleay River; Monday, February 7, in the Tamworth district; Friday, February 18, in the police districts of Kiamia and Shoalhaven; Thursday, February 10, in the Inverell district; Thursday, February 10, in the Murrumburrah district; Wednesday, February 23, in the district of Temora; Monday, February 7, in the police district of Patrick's Plains; and Monday, February 7, in the districts of Walcha and Guyra.

In reference to the Brisbane telegram published yesterday concerning the Queensland business of Messrs. Wright, Heaton, and Co., and the losses made by that firm, we learn that the transactions of the company in the northern colony have for some time past been regarded as unsatisfactory; that the losses referred to are the accumulations of the past three years, and that now the company is arranging to entirely close its business relations with Queensland.

The weather on Tuesday night was extremely cold and oppressive, and the result was that yesterday there was a complete change. About 11 o'clock a fresh wind beard the champion of protection in his own den, there has been no attempt to reciprocate the compliment on the North Shore. Valour, however, is to be effective should temper courage with discretion; and it is possible that sound discretion was the thing most conspicuous in the absence of opposition to the head of the new Ministry. There would have been more excitement had the election been contested; but a victory after a hard struggle would hardly have had much significance as this practical acknowledgement in a fight against the "dry bones"; there is not a man on the other side who would have had the ghost of a chance. And it will be acknowledged that such acknowledgment should not be underestimated. We have no desire to indulge in prophecy; but it is at least possible that before the close of the month it will be seen that a feeling somewhat similar to that which disengaged opposition to the man at St. Leonards will in many a country electorate take the heart out of the opposition to candidates who concur with him. Indications of this are to be seen in the addresses to the electors; and the candidates are assuring what they think the electors will receive. There is doubtless a widespread belief that in these critical times we need not only a firm hand, but also an experienced hand, at the head of our affairs. But there is an element of risk in this. We do not want personal government irrespective of principle. The electors will be well to return men who will support Sir HENRY PARKER; and the great principle, he is defining; but they should beware of men who will defend; but they should beware of men who will seek, under cover of professions of belief in Sir HENRY PARKER, to gain a position in which at some convenient time they may oppose and help to defeat the policy he now represents.

In his address at Redfern on Tuesday evening Mr. SUTHERLAND referred to the action he had taken in putting a stop to the arrangement made by his predecessor for running a morning train on the Southern line. The reason given was that the thing was illegal—in other words, that the Executive Council would not have sanctioned the arrangement. How does he know what the Executive Council would or would not have done? Did he submit the question to that body? and if he did not, what right has he to say that the Executive Council would not have sanctioned a morning train? The course which Mr. LYNE proposed to take was resolved upon after consultation between the Railway Department and the Post Office, and the late MINISTER FOR WORKS must have been perfectly satisfied that he had authority to do what was contemplated or he would not have gone so far as to fix the date for starting a through train in the morning. Mr. SUTHERLAND told the Redfern meeting that a satisfactory arrangement could only be made by reasoning the matter out properly. Exactly so. Mr. LYNE reasoned out the matter properly, not in his own mind, simply, but with the official heads of two Departments, and he made an arrangement that was eminently satisfactory. Mr. SUTHERLAND has upset that arrangement, not after "reasoning the matter out properly," but without pretending to reason it out at all, for he acted almost before he had time to turn round in his official chair. It is evident that he has not brought any reasoning to bear upon the matter even now, or he would not talk about the substitution of a morning for an evening train costing the country £1000 per week. The question of cost was gone into by the late MINISTER FOR WORKS, and nothing was said about £1000 per week. It is a well-recognised principle of responsible Government that new Ministers should not hasty reverse the Departmental arrangements of their predecessors, and the soundness of the doctrine is self-evident, for if changes were made all round as soon as a new Administration took office, the affairs of the country would be thrown into confusion. The communication from the Commission for Railways and the Postmaster-General intimated that free carriage by rail would be granted for all New South Wales exhibits, and that telegrams on office business would be transmitted with a colony-free cost. In a letter dated the 25th January, the secretary of the Adelaide Juries' Association, referring to the space for the New South Wales court, suggested that Mr. Cumming should, if possible, visit Adelaide and inspect the space accommodation at an early date, with a view to making arrangements for subdivision and decoration. Mr. Cumming intimated that he could not possibly be spared from his duties in Sydney, and the Commission decided that they would at the next meeting consider the advisability of deputing some member to visit Adelaide and report upon the allotting of the New South Wales space. There were presented for inspection progress reports of a satisfactory character from the two collectors of exhibits, one of whom will leave Sydney for the county districts at the end of the present week. Mr. A. Morris reported verily that he had communicated privately with the principal wine-growers of the colony, inviting their co-operation as exhibitors at Adelaide, and pointing out circumstances which should induce them to consent to such a course. On the suggestion of Professor Rennie, it was decided to remit to Mr. Charles Moore, who has charge of timber and forest products in the classification, whether it would not be desirable to make use for public information of the results of tests of New South Wales timber applied by Professor Warren of the Sydney University. It was decided that, unless otherwise ordered, the future meetings of the commission should be held at 4.30 p.m. on Tuesday in each week.

There was a large attendance at the first annual meeting of the St. Andrew's branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, Summer Hill, held on Tuesday evening last. A fairly satisfactory report and balance-sheet were presented. The Rev. John Vaughan presided, and drew attention to the fact that notwithstanding the decided local option vote which had been recorded, no less than three applications for licensed public houses had been applied for in this parish at the recent licensing court, two of these being within 200 or 250 yards of the Public school. The Rev. Joseph Barnes, deputation from the parent society, delivered a forcible address, and he was followed by Messrs. B. D. Pring, Hugh Robson, and J. Iddon. Members of the church choir gave some well-rehearsed songs and glee, and the meeting was closed by a whole assembly singing the National Anthem. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year:—President, Rev. J. Vaughan; secretary, Mr. J. Toser; treasurer, Mr. W. H. Thompson; committee: Dr. Chambers, and Messrs. C. D. Pring, E. M. Armstrong, Hugh Robson, C. A. Robey, John McDonald, W. Fowler, A. J. Gray, Theo. Orton, E. K. Gilham.

A meeting of the New South Wales Blind Men's Friendly Society was held at Mr. Olsen's residence, 200, Goulburn-street, last evening. The society is now in its infancy, having been in existence only a few months. Its members are all blind. The number on the roll at present is 28. To become a member of the society, and to participate in its benefits, a half-crown entrance-fee is demanded from those wishing to join, after which a levy of 3d. a week is made on all members.

The object of the society is to assist all members who may become sick and incapacitated, and to those in need of lame relief. As in all kindred societies, officers have been appointed—the secretary (blind) writes the minutes of the meeting by a process known as Braille's type (perforated holes in paper), and he is equally efficient in translating any notes of any previous meeting.

It is probable that should circumstances admit, the society will become affiliated with the other friendly societies.

A rifle match was fired on Mon. last, the 31st ult., between the Molong Volunteers and civilians combined and the Orange Citizens Rifle Club, on the Orange Rifle Range, resulting in a win for the Orange team by 109 points.

The second annual cavalry tournament and military sports organised by the West Cadet & Light Horse will be held on Saturday next, on the Agricultural Society's Ground at Moss Vale. The programme covers 17 events, some of which are of a very interesting character, such as combat and exercises with the various weapons of different arms, tent-pulling, wrestling on horseback, rescuing wounded men (as represented by dummies), and jumping hurdles with and without arms. Satisfactory entries have been received. His Excellency Lord Carrington, honorary colonel of the cavalry, is expected to be present.

Six resolutions passed at a meeting held in the Domain in disapproval of the continuance of assisted immigration were presented to the Colonial Secretary by a deputation yesterday. Sir Henry Parkes informed the gentlemen who waited upon him that the last immigrant ship for which provision had been made had left Eng. and in the present disturbed condition of the working population of this colony he certainly should not think of asking the Parliament to supply any other funds for immigration at this time.

We have received a letter from a correspondent who protests against the present mode of taking the votes at Parliamentary elections, which, he says, enables political associations, by means of plumping, to return their candidate. He proposes the following remedy:—"To reverse the present mode by taking the vote against the candidates instead of for them and letting each voter cast against each candidate over the required number. For example, Castlebury returns four members. There may be sixteen candidates. Give each voter twelve tickets, with his own name and number on the electoral roll on them, the sixteen candidates to have each a separate ballot-box with his own name distinctly written on it. Let the voter use his tickets against the candidates he objects to, using all twelve. It only remains to count the tickets, and the four candidates who have least are the members returned. This is simple, and would effectively reduce political associations to their own proper vote and influence. At present independent voters are practically disfranchised, and the minority rules."

At the Wesleyan Conference yesterday it was resolved that the Rev. J. H. Fletcher be nominated for appointment to the position of theological tutor during the current year, and that the Rev. Dr. Kelmscott be nominated for appointment to the office of Principal of Newington College.

The corvette Adler, which arrived in Farm Cove yesterday, is the latest addition to the naval strength of Germany in the South Pacific. She has a complement of 130 officers and men, and carries four large guns (15 centimetre breech-loaders) and three Hotchkiss guns. Mr. von Oertzen, Imperial German Commissioner, was a passenger by the Adler from New Britain.

We are informed that in consequence of the contrivance not having completed Wilkinsons combination truck in time for the Board of Inquiry to have a trial of the end-loading system before the departure of the Queensland Commissioners Mr. Thalton, the two remaining members of the board visited Homebush on Monday morning last, when several of the trucks, which had been opened at the ends by the Department, were placed at each end of Wilkinsons truck, and a number of sheep were run through. The pattern entered the truck and showed that by his arrangement the stock was loaded in one-fourth of the time; that the stock was loaded in one-fourth of the time; that the stock was not subject to the same cruel treatment, and that the chances of loss in sheep through smothering are reduced to a minimum by the division of the truck into compartments. The construction of the patent is such that it may be converted into a sheep, cattle, or goods wagon in three minutes, and may be used for half a truck of cattle and the balance sheep, any other class of stock or goods.

The weekly meeting of the New South Wales Commission for the Adelaidians Juvenile International Exhibition 1887, was held in the Colonial Secretary's office yesterday afternoon. There were present—His Excellency, R. D. Acland, C.J. (president), in the chair, Hon. Mr. E. C. Calvert, Mr. Augustus Morris, Mr. A. Hilder, J. J. Calvert, and A. Cumming (secretary). Professor Bonnici, of the Adelaids University, chairman of the Adelaide Commission, was also present as a visitor. A statement of apology for non attendance was read from Messrs. F. A. Franklin and W. W. Richardson. Communications from the Commissions for Railways and the Postmaster-General intimated that free carriage by rail would be granted for all New South Wales exhibits, and that telegrams on office business would be transmitted with a colony-free cost. In a letter dated the 25th January, the secretary of the Adelaide Juries' Association, referring to the space for the New South Wales court, suggested that Mr. Cumming should, if possible, visit Adelaide and inspect the space accommodation at an early date, with a view to making arrangements for subdivision and decoration. The following was the attendance at the National Art Gallery of New South Wales during the past month:—Total days: 9944; on Sundays, 7023; total: 16,971. Average for 28 working days, 344; average for 6 Sundays, 1604.

THE COLLISION AT SEA.

(BY CABLE.)

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SINKING OF TWO PASSENGER SHIPS.

TERrible LOSS OF LIFE.

(LONDON, FEB. 1.)

Further particulars are to hand in reference to the sinking of the emigrant ship Kapunda while on the voyage from London to Fremantle, Western Australia. The vessel which came into collision with the Kapunda was the barque Adam Elmore, the locality of the disaster being south of Macclesfield, off the east coast of South America. The Kapunda went down within 16 seconds after the shock. The Adam Elmore also sank. There were on board the Kapunda 16 second-class passengers, 33 passengers for the Land Grant Company of Western Australia, and 227 immigrants. The only saloon passengers were Mr. and Mrs. Field and two children. The conduct of the passengers before the sinking of the vessel could not be excused, and there was no confusion on board. The first mate, baker, carpenter, and four sailors, with eight immigrants, named Wiggins, Barnes, Daly, Russell, O'Calahan, Sandford, Reece, and Broadhurst, landed at Bahia. The fate of the others is unknown. It is reported at Rio and Macclesfield that all the women and children perished.

The Crown agents have cabled from Bahia that Mr. Charles Bright, one of the directors of the Union Bank, is amongst the survivors.

(There appears to be some mistake, as the Union Bank authorities state that no person of the name of Bright is on their directorate.)
